The speech of acceptance delivered vesterday at Sen Girt, N. J., is an estounding political document. Who wrote it? Certainly not Dr. Woodrow Wilson, the historian, publicist and student of government, chased to the tion, woods some time ago because of his infortunate tendency to express defiulte views on all sorts of embarrassing juestions. Neither could it have been Governor Wilson, who on quitting scholarship for politics deliberately adopted a programme of radicallsm. discovered that William J. Bryan was the one fixed point in the Democracy" and received the Democratic Presidential nomination solely because the convention was persuaded by Mr. Bryan and others that as a radical he would neither bleach nor shrink. The man who made radicalism a stepping stone to political preferment would naturally liave had some kindly word to say of the radiculism of the Baltimore convention-the most progressive which the Democratic party has ever held.
